THE BURIED SWORD.

CENTRAL PUBLICITY BOARD, SIMLA.

THE BURIED SWORD.

This is the tale of the man who buried his sword to keep it safe.

He said, "This sword enabled my father, and his father, to protect themselves against dacoits. It is an invaluable possession, and must be safeguarded."

So he buried it.

A celebrated dacoit got wind of this. "Now," said he, "is my chance." And he went, and fell upon the defenceless man, and took his women and all his goods, and enslaved him.

And whether he found the buried sword, or whether it remained buried in the ground, does not matter it was no longer any good to its owner.

Now this is a parable.

The present War is a war of resources. In the old simple days, when each man had to protect himself against possible enemies, without his weapon he was helpless.

In these days, people fight, not only with swords, but with all they possess, for all they possess. Money, no less than men, is a people's weapon. What will happen to a people that buries that weapon?

What happened to the man in the parable?

His father had used his weapon to protect his life, his liberty and his belongings. And his weapon was no worse in the end; on the contrary, use had greatly improved it. He handed it on to his son better than ever.

Money is our weapon. Let us use it for the defeat of our foes, who, if they could, would rob and enslave us, as they have already robbed and enslaved small States like Belgium and Servia, outraged their women and destroyed their lands. It is our vital interest to lend our weapon, our money, to the Government,—knowing that we shall receive back, when our liberties are assured, far more than we ever lent.
